The district examined several options that were available to meet the class size requirement. It was determined the impacts of these options were not in the best interest of the students and their families. 1) Placing additional students in co-teaching classrooms would increase the class sizes of our neediest students diminishing our ability to better provide differentiated instruction; 2) changing the classroom assignment of students during the year would disrupt the teacher/student relationships that have been created and 3) eliminating parent's ability to chose their student's teacher would decrease family involvement in the student's educational process.
